

Are you a registered medical practitioner looking for a new challenge?

The Judicial Appointments Commission is seeking registered medical practitioners to sit as judicial members of the First-tier Tribunal's Social Entitlement Chamber at locations throughout England, Wales and Scotland. You will help determine appeals against decisions of government departments relating to disability, capability for work, industrial accident and disease benefit claims.

The roles offer an excellent opportunity to use your professional medical knowledge and experience to consider evidence and, as a tribunal member, make decisions on cases that may profoundly affect the lives of those involved.

Induction training in the relevant legal principles and in judicial skills will be provided, and is backed by a comprehensive system of continuous training, information, mentoring and appraisal.

You will normally be offered a minimum of 15 days work per year, but there is the opportunity to sit more frequently if you are available to do so.
